REPORT OF SCHOOLS.

TO THE CITIZENS OF WAKEFIELD:

Your committee would congratulate you on the very general success of your schools during the past year. No term of school has proved a failure, nor has any serious difficulty in the management of any school come to our knowledge. All the teachers, we have reason to believe, have devoted their best energies to the advancement of their pupils, and few have been the exceptions where there has not been a hearty co-operation with them, on the part of the scholars.

Our earliest acquaintance with the schools showed us very plainly that their principal defects were want of thoroughness in preparation for reciting, of promptness in recitation, and lack of good reading. These deficiencies were pointed out, both to teachers and pupils, and their co-operation secured, with our efforts, to improve in these respects. In this direction we can but think good progress has been made. Still the top-most round of the ladder has not, by a long distance, been reached.

After the alphabet is mastered, such lessons should be assigned as the scholar is able to commit, and, so far as possible and practicable, the teacher should see to it that the lesson is learned before the recitation.

The recitation is no place to commit the lesson ; that is the place to elucidate and enforce it. A lesson imperfectly committed will, of course, be imperfectly recited. Hence the mumbling, low-toned, hesitating manner in recitations. Whatever is worth doing at all, is worth doing well; and if when "it is done, it is done well, then it were well it was done quickly." Both teachers and scholars should enter the school room as if they meant business. Let the teachers be patient, prompt, energetic, active, wide-awake in the school, and enthusiasm, activity, perseverance and promptness will be manifested on the part of the scholars in the exercises. Every pupil, too, should be made to stand on his own individual merits, and no recitation, however insignificant, should ever be in concert. But we are aware that the altogether too great number of classes, exceeding, in some schools, the number of scholars, and the too great multiplicity of text books in the same branch of education, and sometimes by the same author, are a great obstacle to this much needed reform.

In regard to reading, too little attention, we think, has been paid to it. It has been too much a haphazard or put-by business in all our schools, high and common. Hence so comparatively few good readers among the educated. To remedy this defect, we have endeavored to enforce the necessity of having an exact lesson given, studied and recited, in this branch of education, from the time the alphabet is learned till the scholar graduates from the school. And what an accomplishment to be a good reader! How does it add to the power and influence of the occupant of the pulpit, bar, or social circle. And to be a perfect reader is to give the thoughts of others as though they were your own, and not read them from book or paper at that. Perfection is what we, poor mortals, should aim at in all things. To accomplish this, or come anywhere near it, the scholar should be taught to read naturally, and no measured cadence or assumed tone should be allowed. And we believe the effect for smaller classes especially, of reading much in concert is bad.

If just as the "twig is bent the tree's inclined," how vastly important it is that those who have the bending of the twig should bend it in the right direction. Next to the care of home, our children are intrusted largely to the care of the "common school teacher." By example the teacher should enforce his precepts, whether secular or moral. Now we have heard several of the teachers very badly pronounce some very common terms, and use some very ungrammatical phrases, in the school room, but we are most happy to say that we have heard no word from them, or seen no act of theirs, of an immoral tendency. Must not Heaven look with rejoicing upon the labor of the faithful teacher, who is trying to turn the youthful mind from the paths of sin into those of virtue and peace?

During our short experience as committee, we have been almost flooded with the circulars, and bored not a little by the agents, of the different houses of publication of school books. To most of the agents we have turned a deaf ear, and to most of the circulars a blind eye. We believe the supervisors of the schools of the State should have some concert of action, and should unitedly set their foot on this thing, and should not allow an already tax-ridden community to be unnecessarily taxed to help on what has become a mere speculation, by making frequent changes of text books. We have not felt warranted in making any change, and do not believe any change in the near future is called for, unless perhaps the substitution of Greenleaf's for Hagar's Arithmetic would be an improvement.

In your twelve districts, during our supervision, you have had twenty-six terms of school. The whole number of weeks taught is 261 3-5.
